

Best Practices of 2018-19

• Budding Entrepreneurs: First Attempt- Naye Uddhmi, Paheli Uddan .

In continuation with the healthy practice adopted in the last session i.e. “Earn While, You Learn”, In this session, a new effort has been undertaken to develop different other skills in students. Today, the world being growing in to a global market, the need of the hour is to make the students market ready with efficient managerial skills and administrative efficacy. Gone are the days when women don’t enter the business arena. Now-a –days, women are more successful business women. In the corporate sector, women have turned out to be at the top by taking wise and profitable decisions for their concerns. Women are considered as an entity having the capacity to be multitasking. They are observed as the best managers of their concerns because of their decision making capacity. Keeping this in mind, this healthy practice has been initiated from this session by Department of Commerce. Faculty and students of the department organize stalls of self-prepared eatables. The students make all the required arrangements for these stalls from purchasing to earning profit. They work in a properly planned manner to reach out their target. They prepare eatables, mark price of the items by keeping in mind the income and expenditure. They sell their delicious eatables to the staff and students and earn profit. This practice has helped in inculcating entrepreneurial, managerial and marketing skills amongst students. The students have taken this practice very positively and expressed that this way, they get practical knowledge of the subjects taught in their classes. They can implement theoretical knowledge into the practical utilization. They also learn the importance of hygiene in eatables and how to be efficient managers and entrepreneurs in their future life.

• Literary Competition: “Innovative Craft for Draft”:

From time immemorial, in human world, words play a primary role in changing the very course of action and for everyday interaction. It is aptly said, “Pen is mightier than the sword”. There are countless ways of writing on the same topic. There are innumerable techniques of how we manoeuvre with the vocabulary. That’s why to give the flights to the latent and creative skills of the budding yet potential writers, a literary competition named, Innovative Craft for Draft’ has been introduced as an innovative and new healthy practice during the session. With this students not only get the golden opportunity to hone their grammatical and syntax based knowledge, but also to explore and express their perspective towards different topics of contemporary relevance and application. Under this specially formulated and well organized activity, all students pertaining to all streams of the college are involved and divided into different groups and all the teachers are assigned the duty to conduct this collaborative activity in the college. Students are allowed to pen down their imaginative flights in the medium of their choice. So, the students express their literary and creative skills in the form of anecdotes, short story, poems, fun facts and topics related to other areas of knowledge like Science, technology, personal grooming, hygiene and general awareness . Students generally prefer to express their views in any one of three main languages which are Hindi, Punjabi and English according to their suitability. They select any one medium and further these students are assessed and evaluated by the subject teachers to mark their growth and capability in expressing themselves. Medium-wise best entries are awarded with the positions and student winners are also awarded with certificates. With this innovative and best practice, students are informed and apprised with latest and updated areas of knowledge. Moreover, they also learn how to register their expression and imaginative impressions on pages creatively and confidently by creating their draft of writing with novelty, modernity and new approach . Students when frame the draft, learn how to discover better alternatives and to draw positivism even in the tough, crucial and challenging times .Besides , students get the platform for empathize with the social as well as environmental issues. Moreover, this activity allows the budding writers to stimulate their energy in the positive direction and push their imagination to ‘think out of the box’ and also to improve their communication skills.
